Your UBC Science First-Year Bucket List

- Attend Imagine Day UBC
- Connect with your Orientation Leader for questions
- Identify one key contact to help you tackle questions
- Attend the Team Social in September to reconnect with your Orientations group
- Visit Science Advising with any academic questions or concerns
- Identify one key resource that successful you can use (Science Peer Academic Coaches, resource centres, counselling)
- Get the phone or email details for your Enrolment Services Professional
- Get the phone or email details for one other support on campus (academic advisors at the Science Advising Centre)
- Make three connections to other students on campus
- Find a perfect study spot on campus
- Attend one event or workshop that builds your academic engagement
- Find one new study strategy or resource supporting your academic success (Science Peer Academic Coaches)
- Experiment with at least two methods of studying (group, individual, online, silent)
- Explore UBC Science’s program specializations and second year application
- Attend Beyond First Year and Meet Your Major to learn about program specializations
- Declare your major/area of specialization at the end of the year
- Identify effective study strategies for exams
- Speak with a prof or instructor one-on-one or in a group (office hours or after class)
- Join the UBC Science Students Facebook group
- Explore at least one health and wellness resource offered by UBC
- Apply to an involvement opportunity or work experience
- Join an AMS student club to explore your interests
- Participate in a class, intramural event or workshop at UBC Rec
- Attend a major athletic event held by UBC Rec (Storm the Wall, Day of the Longboat)
- Visit one of the beautiful gardens or museums at UBC (free for UBC students)

science.ubc.ca/students/new  @ubcscience
If you engage in a wide range of campus activities you’re more likely to succeed academically. So let’s plan your first year at UBC Science!